Thunder on a wall.

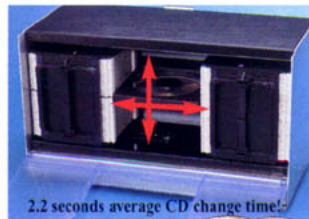

2000 songs in the space of a pay phone.

We startled the industry when we first introduced the concept of a space-saving wall-mounted jukebox in the late 80's. No one knew how such a radical concept, made possible by the compactness of our advanced technology, would be accepted. The market's reaction startled even us. Not only were they accepted, they were overwhelmingly accepted. And not just because of their ability to open up locations with limited space, the purpose of our innovation, but because of their wonder, their uniqueness ... 2000 songs in the space of a pay phone.

Today's Digital Thunder is even more of a wonder to its patrons and establishment managers. Its song-to-song change speed is so fast that it's now measured in microseconds ... hardly a perceptible delay. Its programmable abilities are so vast that it can perform technological magic every bit as wondrous as its "jukebox on a wall" appearance. And its compatibility with rapidly advancing technology assures its operator-owners that it will still be performing its magic for decades to come.
